30. For more on German art perspectives/movements from both sides of Germany, see Barron, Eckmann, and Gillen, Art of Two Germanys.

31. Lou Reed's Berlin album begins with its title track, "Berlin," in somber discord, with the opening lines, "In Berlin, by the wall / you were five foot ten inches tall / It was very nice/ candlelight and Dubonnet on ice." Reed's conceptual album is about an American man, Jim, in Berlin who falls for a seemingly depraved German woman, Caroline. Much separates the lovers, not in terms of physical distance or in geopolitics in their shared apartment in West Berlin, but in terms of the alienation brought on by drugs, sex, and violence shared between them. Also for Jim, who sees himself as lacking in financial power, his laments include comparisons to "men of good fortune" against whom he cannot measure. The couple deals with the perilous nature of his failed power through acts of defiance and deviance. In turn, Jim ends up loathing Caroline. Berlin is the stage for stormy and sordid identities. Reed's character expresses sadness in embittered, angry, and desperate gestures. Reed sparingly uses the historical situation of occupied West Berlin to add texture to the story; however, he does include moments that place Jim's situation against those of U.S. military servicemen. On "The Kids," Reed sings, "The black Air-force sergeant was not her first one / and all the drugs she took every one … and I'm the water boy / the real game is not over here." Reed sings out of a wounded sense of masculinity, channeling his alienation through constructions of racial and gender otherness in Berlin. For more on Lou Reed's Berlin, see Anthony DeCurtis, "My Brilliant and Troubled Friend Lou Reed," Guardian, October 1, 2017.

32. "Shinkichi Tajiri: Interview MFZA mit Prof. Shinkichi Tajiri," 1988, rev. 2014, https://www.paranorm.de/paranorm_1986_2039/Tajiri_Interview_Biografie.htm.

33. Hillenius, Tajiri, and Marks, Tajiri.

34. Tajiri, Autobiographical Notations, 93; Hillenius, Tajiri, and Marks, Tajiri.

35. Tajiri, Autobiographical Notations, 74.

36. This echoed an earlier statue titled Nagasaki (1957), a figure with a classical form but with a headless and armless body and webbed skin. See ibid., 48.

37. Ibid., 69.

38. Tajiri and Tegenbosch, Shinkichi Tajiri, 4.

39. Hillenius, Tajiri, and Marks, Tajiri. In the rendering of this knot in his 1974 Boijmans-van Beuningen Museum and Bonnefantenmuseum exhibition catalog, he included a scraperboard rendering of this sculpture with his mother embedded in its scene.

40. All image readings draw from Tajiri, Berlin Wall. Giotta and Ryu Tajiri and Axel Klausmier also provided additional assistance in locating these images in Berlin.

41. Hildebrandt, Divided Germany. In historic documentation of this period of division, we often view the sign from the West. However, if we consider the mirrored signage of the GDR, other border imperatives emerge. The most common exit signs of the GDR, mostly viewed by foreign visitors rather than citizens, stated, "You Are Now Leaving the Main City of the German Democratic Republic," a claim of ideological and urban authority.

42. Schaden, "Berliner Mauer im Fotobuch," 12.

43. Briese, "Different Aesthetics of the Berlin Wall," 42–43. Briese notes that East Germany continued making plans for additional renovations, at least through 1988.

44. In another image taken in Berlin, he portrayed friend and fellow American artist in Berlin Edward Kienzholz in a playful and nude position lying as a Manet Olympia in his workspace. See Tajiri, Autobiographical Notations, 130.

45. Mesch, Modern Art at the Berlin Wall, 87–90.

46. A selection of the Berlin panoramas can be seen in Tajiri, Autobiographical Notations, 138–39. Others are viewable at the Shinkichi Tajiri Estate in Baarlo, Netherlands (uncataloged). Helen Westgeest notes of one depicting the Bornholmer Strasse Bridge: "The open unfolding bridge, a border crossing between East and West Berlin, looks like an anthropomorphic sculpture and recalls association of form with Tajiri's polyester knots" (Westgeest, Tajiri, 25).