47. Dreyblatt, Amerikanische Künstler in Berlin.

Chapter 4

1. "Address to the Nation and Other Countries on United States-Soviet Relations, Ronald Regan Presidential Library," January 16, 1984, https://www.reaganlibrary.gov/research/speeches/11684a. For more on Reagan policies of rollback, see Brands, Making the Unipolar Moment; Gleijeses, Visions of Freedom; Grandin, Empire's Workshop; Mamdani, Good Muslim, Bad Muslim; and Von Eschen, "Di Eagle and di Bear."
2. Taylor, Berlin Wall, 374–76.
3. De Veaux, Warrior Poet, 337.
4. Lorde, Burst of Light, 54.
5. For more on Lorde's meetings with East German women, see unpublished journal entry [May 17, 1984], box 47, no. 17, and photographs, box 66A, ALP. Additionally, undated notes appear to document a meeting with East German women, including those identified as lesbian and of color. See undated notes, box 24, no. 2.3 106–8, ALP.
6. Lorde had been invited to West Berlin by Dagmar Schultz, an instructor at the Free University and editor of the Sub Rosa Orlanda Women's Press, which had first translated Lorde's work into German. Schultz was inspired by Lorde when she heard Lorde give talks at a pair of international women's conferences—in Copenhagen at the UN Women's World Conference in 1980 and in the Berkshires in 1981. In their correspondence surrounding the invitation, Schultz outlined her admiration of Lorde's work and the exciting potential she saw for Lorde's guest professorship. Among other reasons for teaching in Berlin, Schultz noted, there was a group of young women writers, some of whom were of African descent and would benefit from Lorde's tutelage: "One positive aspect is that you would certainly attract women from the German black community." See Dagmar Schultz invitation, box 5, 1.1.117, ALP, and Course Register 1983, 634–37, ALA).
7. Lorde, Burst of Light, 59, 65.
8. Unpublished journal entry [June 16, 1984], box 47, no. 17, ALP.
9. Lorde, Burst of Light, 62. See also Charly Wilder, "Audre Lorde's Berlin," New York Times, July 19, 2019.
10. This chapter refers to selected unpublished journal entries and poems, as read from and cited in her publicly available archives at Spelman College. Some of her unreleased work during her lifetime has been published in volumes, including Lorde, I Am Your Sister, and Bolacki and Broeck, Audre Lorde's Transnational Legacies.
11. By attending to Lorde's poetic mixed-genre approach, Linda Garber contends in her chapter on Lorde in Identity Poetics that "critics of all stripes exhibit a strange resistance to Lorde as a poet, however, preferring to discuss (and presumably read) her prose work" (105). Lexi Rudnitsky and Megan Obourn have raised similar arguments. My treatment of Lorde's work responds to a perceived lack of close formal readings of Lorde's poetry but also attempts to consider multiple and extra-literary forms of her work, as well as the historical context of her poems. The materials in her archive suggest the importance of revision and interdisciplinary genres of her own production process. See Rudnitsky, "'Power' and 'Sequelae' of Audre Lorde's Syntactical Strategies," and Obourn, "Audre Lorde."
12. Audre Lorde, "Poetry Is Not a Luxury," in Lorde, Sister Outsider.
13. "Lesung im Café Araquin in Berlin (Audio)," July 17, 1984, 3.1.68, ALA.
14. Lorde's published work on Germany includes poems in Our Dead Behind Us (1986) and The Marvelous Arithmetics of Distance (1992); the essay "Apartheid U.S.A." and journal entries from A Burst of Light (1988); and the preface to the foundational Afro-German text Farbe Bekennen (1987, 1992). Also relevant to this body of work are archival or collected works, such as several unpublished poems, her speech at the Dream of Europe Conference in Germany (1987), and interviews published in Lorde and Hall, Conversations with Audre Lorde (2004). There also remains