31. Lorde biographer Alexis De Veaux writes, “From the location as outsider Lorde criticized US hegemony in the Americas and its hypocrisy as a democracy” (De Veaux, Warrior Poet, 337).

32. Lorde, Our Dead Behind Us, 49.

33. Unpublished journal entry [April 27, 1984], box 46, no. 17, ALP.

34. For more on black women writers and “rituals of return,” see Hardin, “Rituals of Return.”

35. Lorde’s poem evokes the Berlin photography of American artist Nan Goldin, whose Ballad of Sexual Dependency included an image taken of a friend, Suzanne, in East Berlin’s Pergamon Museum bathroom. Goldin premiered a slide show version of Ballad in West Berlin in 1984. Bathrooms were important spaces for Goldin’s intimate photographs, especially those taken in Berlin. She went on to take a self-portrait in a Berlin bathroom in 1991. See Goldin, Ballad of Sexual Dependency, and “The Berlin Ballad of Nan Goldin,” Economist, January 6, 2011, http://www.economist.com/blogs/prospero/2011/01/contemporary_photography.

36. Lorde, “First Impressions,” box 31.2.4.314, ALP.

37. Ibid.

38. Avi-Ram, “Apo Koinou in Audre Lorde and the Moderns.”

39. Photographs, box 66A, ALP.

40. For more on workshops in West Germany and Europe, see ALA; Lorde, Burst of Light; De Veaux, Warrior Poet, 340–44; and Schultz, Audre Lorde. For more on Lorde’s work with East German women’s writers’ groups, see unpublished journal entry [May 17, 1984], box 47, no. 17, ALP; photographs, box 66A, ALP; undated notes, box 24, no. 2.3 106–8, ALP; and Schultz interview, December 10, 2010.

41. Schultz interview, December 10, 2010.

42. Annotation, photograph, box 66A, ALP. For more on Lorde’s reading at the Amerika Haus, see DVD extras on Schultz, Audre Lorde, and Melba Joyce Boyd, “Politics, Jazz and the Politics of Aesthetics,” in Diedrich and Heinrichs, From Black to Schwarz, 359–61.

43. “Lesung im Amerika-Haus in Berlin-Charlottenburg (Audio),” June 13, 1984, 3.1.61, ALA.

44. Lorde, Burst of Light, 56–57. For more on the history of African American GIs and their German offspring, see Höhn, GIs and Fräuleins.

45. Wright, Becoming Black, 196.

46. Campt, Other Germans, 177.

47. Opitz, Oguntoye, and Schultz, Showing Our Colors. For more on the Afro-German movement, see Campt, Other Germans; Wright, Becoming Black; El-Tayeb, European Others; Tiffany N. Florvil, “Emotional Connections: Audre Lorde and Black German Women,” and Katharina Gerund, “Transracial Feminist Alliances: Audre Lorde and West German Women,” in Bolacki and Broeck, Audre Lorde’s Transnational Legacie; Hügel-Marshall, Invisible Woman; and Lennox, Remapping Black Germany. Lorde was a key figure in women-of-color feminism, and her work forged connections with other diasporic work domestically and abroad. For more on Lorde’s previous work as a prominent contributor to women-of-color feminism, see Moraga and Anzaldúa, This Bridge Called My Back, and Ferguson, Aberrations in Black.

48. Lorde, Burst of Light, 58.

49. For more on Lorde’s wrestling with the terms of diaspora, see Lester Olson, “Sisterhood as Performance in Audre Lorde’s Public Advocacy,” in Bolacki and Broeck, Audre Lorde’s Transnational Legacies.

50. Lorde, Burst of Light, 80.

51. Unpublished journal entry [June 6, 1984], box 46, no. 17, ALP.

52. Box 27, no. 2.4.132, ALP.

53. All citations of drafts of this poem refer to “Berlin Is Hard on Colored Girls,” in box 31, no. 2.4.324, ALP.

54. Melba Joyce Boyd, “Politics, Jazz and the Politics of Aesthetics,” in Diedrich and Heinrichs, From Black to Schwarz, 262.