55. Lorde's use of "colored" may also resonate with other such deployments in the post–civil rights era. See Ntozake Shange's 1975 choreopoem For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow Is Enuf.

56. For more on the dreamspaces of Lorde's poems, see Gloria Hull, "Living on the Line: Audre Lorde and Our Dead Behind Us," in Wall, Changing Our Own Words.

57. All citations of this poem refer to "Berlin Is Hard on Colored Girls," in Lorde, Our Dead Behind Us, 22–23.

58. Across her poetry, Lorde draws her poetic imagery from actual experiences and imaginative gestures. She uses the perspective of "I" for herself and to embody witnesses for others. This demands readers' close and open consideration of meaning and subjectivity.

59. The characterization of Berlin as a space of queer identifications and history, following the Weimar period, has been primarily studied through a gay male and critical masculinities focus. Renewed focus on the multiple and understudied overlaps between queer communities in Berlin may also yield new perspectives on the reputation of the city as a queer place. Important Western figures in this history include Christopher Isherwood and David Bowie. Lorde, as well as photographer Nan Goldin, writer Bill Van Parys, and others also represent intersections and significant narratives of queer life in Berlin through lesbian, feminist, and radical perspectives. See Stewart, Greenwood Encyclopedia, 193.

60. For more on the Berlin Opera, see "Music View; East Berlin Opera Nervously Awaits the Next Act," New York Times, June 24, 1990, and Pugh, "Berlin Wall and the Urban Space and Experience of East and West Berlin," 62.

61. De Veaux, Warrior Poet, 337.

62. Williams, Interpreting Nightingales.

63. Keats, Complete Poems and Selected Letters. Lorde addressed Keats, among other Romantic poets she critically read while at Hunter College. See Lorde and Hall, Conversations with Audre Lorde, 32.

64. Schultz interview, December 10, 2010.

65. Ladd, Ghosts of Berlin, 151–52, 162.

66. Box 43, ALP.

67. Unpublished journal entry [July 29, 1984], box 46, no. 17, ALP.

68. All citations of drafts of this poem refer to "This Urn Contains Earth from German Concentration Camps," in box 31, no. 2.4.322, ALP.

69. Claude Lanzmann, on Shoah: "Making a history was not what I wanted to do. I wanted to construct something more powerful than that. And, in fact, I think that the film, using only images of the present, evokes the past with far more force than any historical document" (Richard Bernstein, "An Epic Film about the Greatest Evil of Modern Times," New York Times, October 20, 1985, https://www.nytimes.com/1985/10/20/movies/an-epic-film-about-the-greatest-evil-of-modern-times.html).

70. Lorde does not use an umlaut in her published spelling of Plötzensee. In her earlier drafts, she also misspells the name as "Plotenzee" or "Plotensee," as she worked from a German-English transliteration.

71. All citations to this poem refer to "This Urn Contains Earth from German Concentration Camps: Plotzensee Memorial, West Berlin, 1984," in Lorde, Our Dead Behind Us, 24–25.

72. John Keats, "Ode on a Grecian Urn," in Keats, Complete Poems and Selected Letters, 193. I thank Lisa Moore, Meta DuEwa Jones, and the other fellow members of the critical poetry seminar at the Texas Institute for Literary and Textual Studies for pointing out this connection.

73. Box 31, no. 2.4.318, ALP.

74. Also titled "Either We March in Washington or We Blow It Up," as seen in box 31.2.4.306, ALP. All citations of drafts of this poem refer to this ALP listing.

75. Unpublished journal entry [January 30, 1984], box 46, no. 35, ALP.