founded the Southern Negro Youth Congress and published Freedomways, a journal of African American leftist theory and culture, were in East Berlin to commemorate May Day, the annual workers' holiday.[6] Lumer studied at the Brecht Theater and lived with members of the Cuban National Ballet.[7] While on the communist east side of the city, Davis bought Dietz Verlag printings of books by Marx and Engels and watched the May Day parade. She would later recall spending as much of her free time as she could in East Berlin on this visit.[8]

FIGURE 2.1 Cover, Angela Davis: An Autobiography, 1974. (Random House)