rhetoric.[49] What should concern us is not just the defamation of Israel in the orchestrated BDS campaign, but also the erosion of truth and the abuse of academic freedom in order to promote hate speech or anti-Israel resolutions. Misinformation and ignorance of facts on the ground are used to mobilize support for radical platforms that feed into anti-Jewish sentiment and sometimes violence against a volatile background of hostility on the far left and far right to Israel. Postcolonial theory forms the basis for much academic work and teaching nowadays, and it enters the classroom as an agent of political activism. If we do not try to understand the narrative, as Finkler warned, the delegitimization and demonization of Israel will continue to be unquestioned.

NOTES

1. Howard Jacobson, The Finkler Question (London: Bloomsbury, 2010), 234.
2. See David Hirsh, "Accusations of Malicious Intent in Debates about the Palestine-Israel Conflict and about Anti-Semitism: The Livingstone Formulation, 'Playing the Antisemitism Card' and Contesting the Boundaries of Antiracist Discourse," Transversal 1 (2010): 42–77. Hirsh calls this tactic the "Livingstone formulation" after the former Mayor of London who was accused of making anti-semitic comments to a Jewish newspaper reporter.
3. Efraim Sicher and Linda Weinhouse, Under Postcolonial Eyes: Figuring the "jew" in Contemporary British Writing (Lincoln, Neb.: University of Nebraska Press, 2012).
4. Homi Bhabha, The Location of Culture (London: Routledge, 1994), 223.
5. Albert Memmi, Portrait of a Jew, translated by Elisabeth Abbott (New York: Orion Press, 1962), 3–8.
6. Albert Memmi, The Colonizer and the Colonized, translated by Howard Greenfeld (Boston: Beacon Press, 1965), 15–16. On the historical context of Memmi's dilemma see Edith Haddad Shaked and Bat-Ami Bar-On, "On the State of Being (Jewish) between 'Orient' and 'Occident,'" in Jewish Locations: Traversing Racialized Landscapes, edited by Lisa Tessman and Bat-Ami Bar-On (Boston: Rowman and Littlefield, 2001), 185–99.
7. Colin Shindler, Israel and the European Left: Between Solidarity and Delegitimization (New York and London: Continuum, 2012), 213–14; see also Robert S. Wistrich, From Ambivalence to Betrayal: The Left, the Jews, and Israel (Lincoln, Neb.: University of Nebraska Press, 2013) for a detailed analysis.
8. Frantz Fanon, Black Skin, White Masks, translated by Charles Lam Markman (London: MacGibbon & Kee, 1968), 122.
9. Bryan Cheyette, Diasporas of the Mind: Jewish and Postcolonial Writing and the Nightmare of History (New Haven: Yale University Press, 2013), 43–77. Max Silverman notes Fanon's fierce criticism of Sartre for making the Jew a subject of the European gaze, thus robbing him of any experience of being a Jew, just as Fanon is concerned that the Black is in the same way denied the experience of blackness (Frantz Fanon's Black Skin, White Masks, edited by Max Silverman [Manchester

Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,