In Israel, postcolonialism has been taken up as a politically correct position aligned with anti- or post-Zionism, particularly among revisionist historians and sociologists, in studies of the mizrakhi ("Oriental") Jews as Israel's internal colonized, for example in the several essays and book chapters by Ella Shohat on "Arab Jews"; see Kolonialiut vehamatsav hapostkoloniali, edited by Yehuda Shenhav (Tel Aviv: Hakibbutz hameukhad and Van Leer Institute, 2004); Ella Shohat, Taboo Memories, Diasporic Voices (Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 2006). However, some scholars, such as Eitan Bar-Yosef, have used postcolonial theory to show the instability of categories such as whiteness in Israeli popular culture (see his Vila bazhungel: Afrika batarbut hayisraelit [Tel Aviv: Hakibbutz hameukhad and Van Leer Institute, 2013]).
