> Germany is also fighting against the common enemy which oppressed the Arabs and Muslims in their different lands. It knew the Jews perfectly and decided to find a final solution to the Jewish Danger, [one] which will contain their havoc in the world.[35]

Hajj Amin not only argued in favor of the alliance of Nazi Germany and the Islamic world but insisted that Nazism and Islam have an inherent affinity. The following passages come from the Mufti's speech to the imams of the Bosnian SS-Division on October 4, 1944.[36] Note that he addresses his remarks, not to the common soldier, but to their spiritual advisers:

> The friendship and cooperation of two peoples [Moslems and Germans] can only be for the long term, if it is built on a firm foundation. The requirement for this is the compatibility of ideas, common spiritual and material interests, and above all ideals which run parallel. . . .
>
> The friendship and cooperation between Moslems and Germans have become much stronger from the moment that the Nazis seized power, because National Socialism in many respects runs parallel to the Islamic view of the world.

The Mufti then described a number of areas where Islam and National Socialism share common characteristics. Examples included the "Fuehrer Principle," discipline, and obedience which, according to the Mufti, find clear expression in the Koran.[37] With regard to their shared attitude toward the Jews, the Hajj Amin explained:

> Islam and National Socialism approach each other in the struggle against Judaism. Nearly a third of the Quran deals with the Jews. It has demanded that all Moslems keep an eye on the Jews and fight them wherever they find them. In Khaibar, the Jews tried to poison Muhammad, who was sent by God, and undertook various attacks against him, all of which failed. All of Muhammad's attempts to bring them to reason failed, so that finally he found himself forced to do away with the Jews and drive them out of Arabia. . . .[38]
>
> I am of the firm conviction that a victory over the Allies will bring with it a victory over Judaism and thus [remove] a great danger for the Moslems and Islam above all. For this reason, each of us must do and give his best for the victory over the common enemy.[39]

In their recent book, Wolfgang Schwanitz and the late Barry Rubin carefully reconstructed the Mufti's world view. The points which Schwanitz enumerated accurately confirm the above. According to Schwanitz, "Geno-
