cide against the Jews was a necessity in al-Husaini's own ideology, not an idea borrowed from Hitler or abandoned once the Third Reich fell."[40]

Beyond the Mufti's rhetoric, Bernard Lewis noted that Hajj Amin "made his own not insignificant contribution to the destruction of European Jewry." He aggressively lobbied to prevent Jewish emigration from Europe, particularly from Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, and Italy, countries which were allied with Nazi Germany. "In May and June 1943, the mufti sent letters to all four governments demanding that they withdraw their authorization for Jewish emigration and urging them instead to send their Jews to Poland 'where they are under active control.'"[41]

Let us return to the accusation of Article 22 of the Palestine Covenant that "The Zionist movement is essentially fanatical and racialist. . .and its methods are those of Fascists and Nazis [author's italics]."[42] Hajj Amin's words really demonstrate the opposite. He proclaimed without qualification that Nazism and Islam have a true affinity. This authoritative source negates the accusations that Zionism and Nazism are the same. Combining Nazi racism, anti-Zionism, and genocidal antisemitism, the Mufti's words represent a breakthrough.

He has given us an example of the "absolute" and genocidal anti-semitism. On the basis of these texts, it would be reasonable to surmise that the first Arab and Palestinian ideologues and their successors (including Hamas) adopted the Nazi doctrine and idiom. One could suggest that the drive to genocide, as articulated here and in subsequent Palestinian literature does not derive entirely from the Islamic religious and political tradition but from a commingling with Nazi thought. In this respect, one may safely affirm that there are strong bonds of continuity between the program of Nazi Germany and the present-day Palestinian Weltanschauung with its pervasive culture of hatred and politicide.

How should we respond to these expressions of genocidal hatred?

For many years Israeli policy makers have side-stepped the political war which is being waged against the Jewish State. Because they have not responded effectively to this challenge, the resulting damage has been cumulative. Accordingly, we must reevaluate the situation and build a new policy.

We must first come to terms with the reality that over the last two decades our efforts to achieve a negotiated peace have failed. We do not have a "peace partner" but a sworn enemy. By its own admission, the other side Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,