one is regularly reminded to what extent this central UN body—that purportedly supports human rights—actually damages them.

Racists in the Anti-Racist Camp

Israel serves not only as a looking glass for the false humanitarian mask of the UNHRC, but also as a more general sensor in identifying the many racists in the "anti-racist" camp. In addition to the UNHRC resolutions and actions, probably no singular event demonstrated the widespread racism in the anti-racism camp better than the 2001 NGO conference at Durban, branded as a summit against racism. Many thousands of participants took part, representing a multitude of major humanitarian bodies. Yet the anti-Israel resolution adopted there made clear that that it was a gathering of racist antisemites claiming to be anti-racist. Similarly, the 1975 "Zionism is Racism" resolution of the United Nations General Assembly illustrated the discrimatory and racist character of that body.

Another example of bigots within the anti-racist camp is the Turkish Mavi Marmara—a ship which was part of the 2010 flotilla to Gaza. Supposedly part of a humanitarian aid project, it included passengers who had previously expressed their desire to die as martyrs. The Mavi Marmara, along with some others in the flotilla, had no humanitarian aid on board.[13]

International Law

The extreme distortions of international humanitarian law, as far as Israel is concerned, have led to a growing impression that the entire field is a fraudulent construct. Harvard Law Professor Alan Dershowitz once said that "international law is the ultimate exercise in elitist non-democracy."[14] One of the best prisms for understanding the dubious character of international humanitarian law is the UNHRC-initiated UN Fact Finding Mission on the Gaza War, and the document it produced, best known as the Goldstone Report. Its bias and large number of other shortcomings are detailed in a book edited by Gerald Steinberg and Anne Herzberg, titled, The Goldstone Report "Reconsidered." A Critical Analysis.[15]

The humanitarian-racist UNHRC gave the Goldstone commission a biased assignment, and yet the supposedly reputable members of the commission accepted the mission. Dershowitz wrote that, "The British member, Christine Chinkin, had already decided the case without hearing one bit of evidence." He added that "the Irish member of the mission, Colonel Desmond Travers, refused to believe evidence that undercut Hamas' position, even when it was Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,