and Israel (despite half its population being of Afro-Asian origin) as a white racist and colonialist nation.

Far leftists share many of the attributes of Christians. Both are certain of history's outcome, tracing its trajectory toward an inevitable apocalypse in which the forces of good, which they will lead, permanently defeat the forces of evil. Both far leftists and Christians are convinced that they alone possess the key to—and the texts for—understanding the world and humanity's ultimate fate (Marxist or anarchist tracts for far leftists, the Bible for Christians). The social scientist Daniel Bell noted that "Marx could say with Jesus, 'I have come to end all mysteries.'" Both Christians and far leftists denied the validity of alternative paths to their goal (heaven for the former, a near heaven on Earth for the latter), and viewed those who left their movements as heretics aligned with evil powers. For centuries Christians portrayed Jews as the devil's agents, carrying out the most egregious crimes against them. Similarly, the far left repeatedly made fantastic claims that Zionists consistently align themselves with the world's most reactionary and demonic forces. Communists, for example, falsely accused Zionists of bankrolling the (antisemitic) White armies in the Russian Civil War. To this day far left groups claim that Zionists allied with the Nazis during the 1930s and World War II, and perpetrate massacres similar to those of the Nazis against Arabs.[7]

The far left and far right viewed modern Zionism from its inception as an imperialist menace. Both claimed that during its early decades the Zionist movement was dominated by extremely wealthy Jews, most notably the Rothschilds, whom they castigated as the primary sponsors of British imperialism. Over several centuries the British had assembled a vast colonial empire, encompassing the globe. By characterizing Zionism as a driving force behind British imperialism, the far left and far right cast the Jews—a people that even lacked an army of its own for 1,800 years—as a threat to subjugate gentile populations everywhere. This notion was clearly rooted in the Christian Bible's deicide charge. The Jews, the only people powerful and evil enough to murder a god, were capable of seizing control of the world. As British imperialism declined, the far left now presented Zionism as an ally or instrument of American imperialism, while the far right increasingly recast Zionism as an instrument of a world Communist conspiracy, or the moving force behind it.

The far left often echoed the far right in depicting Jews as parasites, bleeding the other in their overriding devotion to materialism. The Christian Bible portrayed the Temple as permeated with money-changing. The far left saw the Jews amassed in a dying social class, the petty bourgeoisie, relying
