out "frightful campaigns of land robbery against the Arab population." The Zionists' objective was to seize control of Palestine's allegedly rich chemical resources.[20]

The Communists first directly linked Zionism and Nazism in the post–World War II East European show trials, most notably the 1952 Slansky proceedings in Prague. There fourteen leaders of the Czechoslovak Communist party, eleven of Jewish origin, were tried on the fantastic charge of conspiring with American and Israeli intelligence to sabotage the Czechoslovak economy in an effort to restore capitalism in Eastern Europe. Most of the defendants were hanged. The Communist prosecutors identified the defendants of Jewish origin as Zionists, even though they were known to be anti-Zionist, often stridently so. Several were forced to confess that they had worked for the Gestapo during the Nazi era. American Communists endorsed the prosecutors' conflation of Zionism and Nazism.[21]

Freda Utley portrayed Israel in a manner almost identical to that of the far left, as a militarist and expansionist nation closely resembling Nazi Germany. Utley was a supporter of Senator Joseph McCarthy, and smeared journalists who criticized him with the antisemitic epithet "Pharisees."[22] In her book Will the Middle East Go West?, published in 1957, Utley endorsed militant anti-Zionist Bertha Vester's claim that the Jews, "who suffered most from Hitler's racist theory, . . . use a similar theory to justify Zionism."[23] In 1961 Utley complained that the Israelis were trying Adolf Eichmann in the same section of Jerusalem "from which the Arabs fled in fear of the Zionist terrorists who had massacred the inhabitants. . .of Deir Yaseen, and who threatened all Arabs who did not get out with the same fate."[24] Like New Left Notes, Utley equated the idea of Jews as a chosen people with the Nazi belief in Aryan supremacy.[25]

This view had earlier been put forward by Charles Coughlin. Coughlin's magazine Social Justice, which was strongly anti-Zionist, in 1939 published an article by a Jesuit priest who explained that the "fundamental reason" for antisemitism was the Jews' "intense racialism," which caused them to feel superior to gentiles. The Jesuit declared that the emergence of the doctrine of Aryan supremacy in Nazi Germany "must not blind us to the fact that the strongest and most persistent supporters of an extreme racial policy have been the Jews."[26]

The CP also made this claim in its newspaper the Sunday Worker in 1949. The Worker declared that there was no antisemitism in the Soviet Union because the Jews there had abandoned "the theory that they were 'a chosen people, superior to the gentile.'"[27]
