In presenting the Jewish state as a criminal state bent on invasion and conquest, Utley merely expanded into book form the views the far right had circulated for years. Women's Voice, edited by Lyrl Clark Van Hyning, the most prominent leader of the quasi-fascist Mothers' groups, in 1948 characterized the Arab-Israeli conflict as the struggle of "the rightful and legal inhabitants" of Palestine [the Arabs] "to expel foreign [Jewish] conquerors."[28] The Mothers' groups had been organized to prevent U.S. intervention in World War II, and during the war lobbied against opening an Allied front in Western Europe and for a negotiated peace with Nazi Germany.[29] Gerald L. K. Smith, America's most-publicized right-wing antisemite from World War II until his death in 1976, similarly declaimed in 1949, "The Arabs own this land. . . . But the Jews have stolen their property with the consent of the United Nations."[30]

Smith distributed a pamphlet entitled Jewish Atrocities in the Holy Land, published in 1949 by the Arab League Information Bureau in Cairo, Egypt, that equated Israelis with Nazis. The pamphlet depicted Israelis perpetrating "sadistic cruelties and wanton brutalities against an innocent [Arab] population, mainly composed of women, children, and old men." The American Jewish Committee commented in 1955 that Arab nations did not need to circulate anti-Zionist hate literature on a wide scale in the United States because they could count on American far rightists to do it for them.[31]

The Anti-Defamation League expressed alarm in 1950 over the far right Anglo-Saxon Federation of America's relentless propagandizing against Israel, including its insistence that the Zionists had established a Jewish state only by inflicting atrocities on Arab civilians. The Anglo-Saxon Federation was founded in 1930 by anti-Zionist Howard Rand and William Cameron, a member of Henry Ford's inner circle. Cameron, as editor of Ford's newspaper the Dearborn Independent, helped the auto magnate wage his venomous antisemitic campaign during the 1920s. In October 1948, the Federation's magazine Destiny trumpeted Arab propaganda that "exposed" the Zionists' "barbaric and inhuman methods of extermination."[32]

After SNCC published its blatantly antisemitic newsletter right after the Six-Day War, denouncing Israel as a criminal state, the New York Times commented that it strongly resembled the newspaper of the white supremacist National States Rights Party (NSRP), The Thunderbolt: The White Man's Viewpoint. The NSRP claimed that blacks were a branch of the ape family and Jews, "vipers of hell." During the Six-Day War The Thunderbolt had "rushed to the defense of the Arabs," charging the Jewish state "with war crimes and genocide." The NSRP had long denounced Israel as a "gangster state." In 1961, The Thunderbolt accused the Jewish state of using "the
