weapons of atrocity" to drive Arabs from their land. Menahem Begin was a "mass murderer" and David Ben Gurion, his "partner in crime."[33]

American far rightists—like the CP in 1929, the later New Left, SNCC, the Black Panthers, and the contemporary far left—have insisted that the driving force behind Zionism was the desire to control the economic resources of Palestine and surrounding areas. In 1949 Gerald L. K. Smith declared in his monthly The Cross and the Flag that Zionist leaders' aim in establishing a Jewish state in Palestine was to gain control of "the chemical wealth" of the Dead Sea, which he valued at five trillion dollars. Linking Zionism to British imperialism, Smith claimed that British chemical interests were "headed by Sir Alfred Mond, (later known as Lord Melchett)," a Jew, who "knew the value" of the Dead Sea chemicals. Smith stressed that Zionist leader Chaim Weizmann was also a chemist. According to Smith, the Balfour Declaration in 1917 "cemented . . . the Zionist grip on the Dead Sea."[34] When Smith ran for president on the ticket of the Christian Nationalist Party in 1948, his platform called for deporting all Zionists from the United States.[35]

Women's Voice similarly claimed that Zionism was an expression of Jews' material greed and "age old dream for Messianic power." It declared that "the head of Zionism is the head of the House of Rothschild in England."[36] The Rothschilds "knew the fabulous value of the chemicals in the Dead Sea." Henry Klein, attorney for accused American fascist seditionists during World War II, explained in Women's Voice that "whoever owns the Dead Sea" could "enslave all the nations on earth." Zionists and the British "chemical trust" had therefore joined forces in the fight "for the most valuable spot of land and water on earth."[37]

Women's Voice asserted that the Zionists coveted the Dead Sea as a step toward controlling vast regions beyond Palestine. The Zionists' "eyes are fixed on the enormous wealth of oil, potash [and] phosphates of the Jordan Valley."[38] Driven by Jewish greed, the Zionists' "new Judea," once established, would inevitably expand to "embrace not only Palestine but also Syria, Transjordan, Mesopotamia, Iraq," and even more Arab territory.[39]

Charles Coughlin had linked Zionism to Jewish usury and parasitism in a two-part article in his newspaper Social Justice entitled "The Toll Keepers of Suez." Social Justice was sold in large quantities every Sunday in front of churches, and on the streets and at subway stations. Noting that its readers were familiar with "the story of the Money Changers in the Temple of Jerusalem," Social Justice declared that Benjamin Disraeli, whom it identified as a Jew despite his having been baptized, had arranged the sale of the Suez Canal to a French corporation controlled by the Rothschilds.[40] Disraeli's "Oriental mind glowed at the prospect of so stupendous a deal."[41]
