administration" in a multinational country that they actually hate.[37] He charged them with inciting hatred among the various peoples of Russia, provoking of ethnic-based riots and supporting (in Russia) the Israeli policy of segregating Muslims; this in order to create a false image of a common Russian-Israeli struggle against the Islamic world. Russian security forces, he claimed, cooperate with Israel and adopt Israeli methods based on racial segregation in the fight against terrorism.[38]

In conclusion, I would like to stress several points of special importance for the current discussion. First of all, the incorporation of ultra-nationalists of the type presented here into mainstream political discourse took place within the last ten to fifteen years in Russia. Secondly, antisemitism (overt or camouflaged) and anti-Zionism have been and remain an essential element of the ideology of ultra-nationalists and this fact does not make them pariahs in the Russian political establishment. At best, as happened in Dugin's case, incorporation into the mainstream forces them to demonstrate more flexibility in their views towards Jews and Israel. Third, modern anti-Zionism in Russia has revived Soviet stereotypes about Zionism as a part of the forces of "Global Evil" controlled by the United States. However, unlike in the Soviet time, modern anti-Zionists tries to depict Israel as an immediate threat to the average Russian. Fourth, they promote the idea of a "common Russian-Palestinian destiny" on various public stages.

There is also a Nazi theme that unites our anti-Zionist protagonists. Thus, the "Florian Geyer" club was established in 2011 in Moscow with Geydar Dzhemal as its chairperson, and with both Alexander Dugin and Maxim Shevchenko as participants.[39] The name chosen was not to honor the hero of the 16th-century German Peasants' War. The club motto "Trotz Acht und Bann!" (Against fear and hate!) was actually taken from the hymn of Die 8 SS-Kavallerie-Division "Florian Geyer."[40]

NOTES

1. Dugin received his Ph.D. in 2004 from the Rostov Juridical Institute of the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Russian Federation (Rostov-on-Don), http://dugin.ru/bio/.

2. See T. Poliannikov, "Po tropam Khimery, ili razmyshleniia o evraziistve i "novom mirovom poriadke" (On trails of Chimera, or thoughts on Eurasianism and "new world order"), 14 Dec. 2002, http://www.centrasia.ru/newsA.php?st=1039820400; V. Mozhegov, "Polzushchii angel" (Creeping angel), Kontinet 144 (2010), http://magazines.russ.ru/continent/2010/144/mo7.html.

3. Alexander G. Dugin, Proekt Evrazia (Project Eurasia) (Moscow: Jauza, 2004), 127–28, 485.

Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,