Synagogues also became a magnet for mob protests. The first target was the Ashkenazi synagogue in Istanbul following a provocative headline in the Yeni Akit newspaper. The newspaper printed angry responses to officials of the Ashkenazi synagogue in Istanbul who had justified the IDF operation in Gaza. According to the newspaper, they had compared the IDF to the Turkish army when it combats PKK terrorism, and that the Palestinians provoke Israel and instigate violence.[25] Following this incident, social media networks announced an "egg attack," the first of which took place on July 22 at the Ortaköy Synagogue. A group carrying anti-Israel posters threw eggs at the synagogue, and were dispersed by the Turkish security forces. However, the most shocking manifestation of antisemitism in Turkey during the Gaza Operation was a rally in Istanbul, at which participants called out "Jew, don't forget, your turn will come."[26] The violent atmosphere in Turkey resembled Germany in the 1930s, and gave rise to cartoons in the style of Der Stürmer.[27] Such vile caricatures did not prevent Turkish apologists from claiming that there was no antisemitism in Turkey, only "righteous anger" against Israel's actions in Gaza.[28]

The tense situation in Turkey during Operation Protective Edge led to initiatives directed not only against the Jewish community as a whole but also against individuals. This included the social media campaign to boycott the works of Turkish-Jewish writer Mario Levi, listed among "Israeli products to boycott" in response to the conflict in Gaza. This particular boycott was widely criticized. Turkish Minister of Culture and Tourism Ömer Çelik, said on Twitter:

> The provocative reactions against Turkey's prominent author Mario Levi are ultimately wrong. It is a hate crime. Our Jewish citizens, their culture and synagogues, are an inseparable part of this country. They are not "guests" who live on this soil. We all live in our country; we all are its landlords.[29]

This was the first time an individual Jew was targeted as part of a general public campaign against Israel.

It was not only individual Jews who suffered, but above all, the entire Jewish community served as a scapegoat. What made the situation worse for Turkish Jews was the call to revoke the citizenship of Turkish Jews who served in the IDF. The staunch pro-government daily, Milat, especially targeted Turkish nationals from the Jewish community who held Israeli passports, arguing that since they would be required to serve in the Israeli army, they had blood on their hands and were responsible for killing innocent Gazan civilians. Milat, which is full of Islamist rhetoric, printed a headline in English: "Go home killers," referring to Jewish Turks who allegedly served

Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,