choices made by administrations in the United States. America is a superpower and can dictate terms to smaller countries. The ability of small countries to resist has limits.

The Camp David Accords brought a peace with Egypt that is still intact. But the Madrid Conference and the Oslo Accords were disasters that led to many deaths, and are causing painful consequences to this day. Many Israeli politicians were naïve in their enthusiasm when the agreements were signed. Others, who could see what a "Trojan Horse" Oslo really was, were shouted down.

Israel has little control over the global spread of the "Palestinian cause." The disinformation campaigns against it, the demonization of Israel, and the return of antisemitism in Europe are not the result of Israel's policies.

Maybe Israel could have done more to counter the disinformation campaigns or have found better ways to sound the alarm about the return of antisemitism in Europe. However, there are limits to what a small country, beset by terrorism, constant rocket attacks, and wars every few years, can do against massive propaganda financed by Arab petrodollars.

Nevertheless, Israel is flourishing. It remains open, free, and independent, despite all the setbacks, dangers, hatred, and threats. It has come a long way since 1948 when the Arab armies attacked the tiny, newborn State of Israel. It is much stronger than in 1956, 1967, or 1973, when Arab armies attacked Israel, or during the waves of suicide bombings at the beginning of the 21st century.

On the other hand, Arab nationalism is dying. It survives only in countries where the economies are crumbling. It has no future. Leaders such as Egypt's President al-Sisi seem to understand the immense scale of the problem and the bankruptcy of religious fundamentalism. Lebanon sits unofficially under the dictatorship of Hezbollah. The secular Republic of Turkey under Erdoğan has been increasingly sliding toward radical islamism and antisemitism. Moderate monarchies survive in Jordan and Morocco, but they will remain underdeveloped for years to come.

Radical islam destroys and threatens the Arab world as much as Israel and the West. It is the most destructive force of the 21st century. It brings only chaos and sterility. It has no future. The only country in the Middle East with a bright future is Israel. Militarily, economically, legally, and technologically, it is strong. Even as birth rates fall throughout the Muslim world, including in the "Palestinian territories," in Israel they are rising.

Hatred of Israel is growing in Europe, but then it never had any real friends there to begin with. On the other hand, ties connecting European countries to Arab and Muslim countries and to the Muslim world in general
