Through these and other statements and actions, the Church promulgates vicious untruths and libels against both Israel and the Jewish people. Yet Islamist groups are terrorising and killing tens of thousands of Christians across the developing world. According to Open Doors, a nondenominational Christian group, about 100 million Christians are being persecuted in more than 65 countries. In Eritrea, more than 3,000 Christians are in prison. In February 2014, jihadists bombed churches in Zanzibar as "dens of non-believers." In March of the same year, members of Somalia's al-Shabaab militia publicly beheaded a mother of two girls and her cousin after discovering they were Christians.

The same month in Nigeria, more than 150 Christians were butchered in a massacre in Kaduna; in June, hundreds died in bomb attacks in the Christian areas of the towns of Kano and Jos. And in Iraq and other Arab countries, Muslims are wiping out Christianity in the very places where it originated.

Yet about all this carnage amongst their own flock, the churches are silent. There is one country in the Middle East where Christians are safe and thriving. That is Israel. Yet astoundingly, not only do the churches give Israel no credit for this but they actually blame it for Christian persecution. Bethlehem was once a mainly Christian town. Now the Christians there are a beleaguered minority, with much of that community driven out by Islamic harassment under the town's Muslim administration. Yet the Anglican Church claims that Bethlehem's Christians have been driven out by the hardships caused by the checkpoints and the security barrier. This shows scant regard for either truth or logic. For if Israel's actions were really the cause of this flight, why haven't the town's Muslims suffered the same fate?

At the same time, the churches are severing their Jewish roots and building bridges instead with Islam. Few seminaries now expect trainee priests to lean Hebrew; if they study another religion, it is more likely to be Islam. The Church of England has taken major steps to affirm Islam as a fellow Abrahamic faith, ignoring the fundamental differences between Judaism and Islam and the far greater affinity between Christianity and Judaism.

In short, given Islam's own supersessionist goal to subsume Christianity, one might say that the Church is busily repudiating its Jewish parent while embracing its Islamic assassin.

In the UK—and now, although more slowly, in the United States too—there is a refusal to acknowledge, let alone deal with, radical Islamist infiltration and subversion. Even though Britain and America started panicking about the Islamic State terrorist militia, which seized a large section of Iraq and began regularly beheading British and American citizens who had been taken hostage, there was still a refusal to accept that these and
