9. Roberto S. Goizueta, "Gustavo Gutiérrez," in Political Theology, edited by Peter Scott and William T. Cavanaugh (Oxford: Blackwell, 2007), 288–301.

10. M. Shawn Copeland, "Black Political Theologies," in ibid., 271–87.

11. Goizueta, "Gustavo Gutiérrez," 289.

12. Ibid., 290–92.

13. Kathy Nadeau, "Cultural Resources for Theologies of Liberation: Local Responses to Global Challenges," Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 41, no. 1 (Mar. 2002): 1–3.

14. Charles R. Strain, "Ideology and Alienation: Theses on the Interpretation and Evaluation of Theologies of Liberation," Journal of the American Academy of Religion 45, no 4 (Dec. 1977): 473–90. The author compares liberation theologies to secular ideologies, claiming that both are committed to "transformative action" aiming to change society according to an ideal "human project." (p. 478).

15. Ibid., 273, where the author describes the Exodus as a paradigm of liberation from oppression.

16. See John Parratt, "Marxism, Black Theology, and the South African Dilemma," Journal of Modern African Studies 28, no. 3 (Sept. 1990): 527–33.

17. James Tunstead Burtchaell, "How Authentically Christian is Liberation Theology?," Review of Politics 50, no. 2 (Spring 1988): 264–81. In liberation theologies, revolution is thus considered a way to change the situation in which the poor live, a Christian act of social change, while revolutionary violence is justified by the different moral standards applicable to the oppressed person who, by virtue of his poverty, has salvation and, because of his poverty, cannot be expected to act according to the same moral rigorousness required of the oppressor. In this sense, Palestinian Christian theology elaborates a moral double standard, by condoning Palestinian terrorism against the Zionist "oppressor."

18. See Goizueta, "Gustavo Gutiérrez, 298; Richard L. Rubenstein, "The Political Significance of Latin American Liberation Theology," International Journal on World Peace 3, no. 1 (Jan.–Mar. 1986), 41–55. Rubenstein here speaks of a "militant reading of the Bible."

19. See Parratt, "Marxism, Black Theology, and the South African Dilemma."

20. Bonganjolo Goba, "The Kairos Document and Its Implications for Liberation in South Africa," Journal of Law and Religion 5, no. 2 (1987): 313–25.

21. Ibid., 315–17.

22. Gershon Nerel, "Anti-Zionism in the 'Electronic Church' of Palestinian Christianity," ACTA occasional papers, no. 27 (Jerusalem: Vidal Sassoon International Center for the Study of Antisemitism, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 2006), 4, 24–28.

23. Naim Stifan Ateek, Justice and Only Justice—A Palestinian Theology of Liberation (New York: Orbis, 1989).

24. Samuel J. Kuruvilla, "Theological Praxis as Resistance in a contextual Framework: Palestinian Christian Peace-building in the Occupied West Bank," Theological Review 34 (2013): 75–94.

25. Mitri Raheb, I Am a Palestinian Christian (Minneapolis, Minn.: Fortress Press, 1995), 81–90.

26. Psalm 42, for example, is called the "cry of the Palestinian refugee." See Ateek, Justice and Only Justice, 87–91

Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,