As a result of these profound cultural and political changes, Israel has been damned several times over: as a nation, as a western nation, as a western racially-based nation, and as a western racially-based nation that insists on repeatedly going to war to defend that triply damned existence.

The question remains, however, why the west turned against itself in this way. I would suggest several reasons.

- The cultural dominance of the sixties "baby-boomers" who put into effect the post–World War II cultural leftist agenda of the "long march through the institutions" in an explicit program to undermine western values.
- The great tide of secularism which swept away biblical morality and against which, especially in Britain, the churches mounted an ineffectual defence. Contrary to popular belief, it was the Hebrew Bible which gave the world reason and freedom, equality and justice. Having decided instead that religion was oppressive and irrational, secularism thus sawed off the civilisational branch on which it sat.
- The financial and moral bankruptcy of Britain, which famously lost an empire and never found a role after World War II, but which nevertheless remains the cultural leader of the English-speaking world. Where British society and values go today, the rest of the west will go tomorrow.
- The legacy of the Holocaust. This not only turned Europe against the nation as the presumably inevitable cause of nationalism but also, with Nazism having been spawned in the very crucible of Enlightenment values, meant Europe more or less gave up on liberal democracy and even reason itself.
- The fury of utopia denied. The various ideologies filling the vacuum left by the retreat from religion—such as humanism, materialism, multiculturalism, and many other 'isms—are all utopian, since in their different ways they each embody a vision of the perfection of the world. When utopia fails to arrive, however, its adherents vent their fury and disappointment onto scapegoats.

Western liberals are aghast and enraged that the so-called "age of reason" has not resulted in the eradication of hatred, prejudice, and poverty and the perfection of life on earth. So it should come as no surprise that, in creating their brave new world, they have turned on the people at the very core of the values they have tried to displace—the Jews. These liberals have nevertheless turned against the religion that underpins the freedom and rationality which lie at the very core of western civilisation and the values they purport to
