later. Members of parliament from the Netherlands and Luxembourg declined to join the European pro-Arab group.

- The creation in June 1974 of a parallel Arab body called the Arab Inter-parliamentarian Union (AIU), which met regularly with the PAEAC in the presence of both the representative of the President of the European Commission and the Secretary-General of the Arab League.

These two bodies, AIU and PAEAC, together formulated through specialized commissions the unofficial Euro-Arab strategies related to Israel and Palestine. They sought to encourage Muslim immigration to Europe, the principles of multiculturalism, the spread of Arab and Muslim culture in the EU, interfaith dialogues and the replacement of European national identities by a new EU identity adapted to immigrants. Together they forged the increasingly antisemitic, anti-Zionist, Islamized, and globalized Europe of today. Their aims appear clearly in their common declarations, policies, and publications as testified by countless documents in books, archives, parliamentary papers, and on the internet.

Robert Swann, first head of the PAEAC, was also chief publisher of the review Eurabia. According to Richard Eyre's article published by the CAABU (2 September 2009), and taken from the Guardian's obituary (23 August 2001), he was a Foreign Office diplomat. In 1966 he briefly served as the second Secretary General of Amnesty International. He moved to Paris as director of the Arab–Non-Arab Friendship Fund (ANAF). After Mayhew and Offroy founded PAEAC in 1974, Swann became its first Secretary General. He kept the directorship of ANAF located in Switzerland in order to finance the activities of PAEAC. Swann is credited with having convinced European parliaments to adopt a unified position favorable to the Palestinians and the Arab world.

Members of PAEAC belonged to the various national parliaments of European Community (EC) member-states and also to countries outside the EC. The Association maintained a section in the European Parliament; its Executive Committee met twice a year in a European city and applied Recommendations 15 and 22 of the 1969 Cairo Conference. Recruited from within the main European political parties, committee members elected the Association's two co-Presidents and Vice Presidents for two-year terms. The Euro-Arab Dialogue (EAD) is an offshoot of PAEAC.

PAEAC, created in 1974 in the aftermath of Palestinian terrorism and the oil boycott decreed by the Arab League after the Yom Kippur war, injected the idea behind Eurabia into the very heart of Europe. To its initial anti-Israel and anti-American program the Association added a new mission relating to
