support can be seen as willing or extorted contributions from vassal countries when viewed from this perspective. As we have seen, European leaders have established transnational and international bodies dedicated to improving relationships between Islam and the West and unifying their position on many issues, including Israel. This policy is conducted through the Foreign Offices of European states and the EU Commission in liaison with Arab diplomats, delegates of the Arab League, and the OIC. But the integration of Islamic norms and conceptual frameworks through the focus on Palestine subverts Europe's own traditions and distorts its values. Multiculturalism and the censorship imposed by fear of Islamophobia become instruments to achieve the West's cultural and moral disintegration.

At the same time, the nature of Judeophobia and the means of its propagation have changed. This situation requires new definitions, new words, concepts, and explanations which can integrate Islamic theology, legislation, history, and jihadist Judeophobia. These notions are not sufficiently familiar to the Western public. It means that the traditional thinking and framework based on Christian antisemitism is inadequate.

The anti-Israel antisemitism currently circulating around the globe is already embedded in a complex machinery of diplomacy, policy, culture, NGOs, education, and media. It involves billions of Euros and dollars. Think tanks and interfaith dialogues feed this global machinery devoted to the demonization of Israel with its multiple networks that unconsciously impregnate the Western mind and culture with Islamic concepts.

Striking similarities exist between the policies of both the OIC and Europe regarding the Arab-Israeli conflict and in other fields. This can be seen in the "Palestinization" of EU foreign policy that mirrors OIC paranoia. Europe has been Palestinized just as it had been Nazified some seventy years ago. Palestinism is the navel and the conveyor of global Judeophobia. This situation mirrors the Islamization through the "Palestinian cause" of Western thinking, culture, policy, and society.

OIC's influence which now dominates all UN networks activates the political and cultural Palestinization of Europe. With its many subramifications it spreads a wide web of networks, commanding hundreds of NGOs and representatives of so-called civil societies—including activists promoting Palestinism, the BDS campaign against Israel, mass immigration, and multiculturalism. The networks of political institutes and think tanks, convert the directives of the European Commission into public opinion by injecting them into the press, publications, films, and propaganda—a bottomless pit consuming billions of Euros. This opaque system lacks transparency, doubling and multiplying itself like a hydra into more networks
