Jobbik called for the end of Zionism.[15] Anti-Zionism and antisemitism in this case are clearly inseparable.

It is also not surprising that most of the anti-Israel demonstrators during Operation Protective Edge in the summer of 2014 in Paris, The Hague, Berlin, and London, not only turned up in antisemitic rallies, but also showed manifest support for Hamas. Indeed, demonstrators shouting "Death to the Jews!" often displayed Hamas flags, showing once more that antisemitism unfolds primarily in the framework of anti-Israel hatred.[16]

It appear that "Never Again" Europe could not but find a way to re-generate antisemitism in the politically correct form known as anti-Zionism. This is the only polite and publicly accepted version of the same malevolent stereotypes that brought about the destruction of Europe seventy years ago. The "new" aspect of this ancient hatred nowadays bears the form of Israelophobia.[17]

The dictionary of contemporary antisemitism was typically reformulated by former Iranian President Ahmadinejad at the so-called Durban 2 conference, which took place in Geneva in 2009. Ahmadinejad defined Israel as a "totally racist state." He called "the Jewish suffering" an excuse for establishing a viciously "racist state in occupied Palestine." Zionists became "racist perpetrators of genocide," and he decried the remarkable "economic and political influence of Zionism and their control of the media."[18]

This lexicon has pervaded the discourse on Israel throughout the world and in particular in Europe. A few examples should suffice. We all remember the shocking declaration of the French ambassador to England in 2001: "All the current troubles in the world are because of that shitty little country, Israel." "Why should the world be in danger of World War III," he argued, "because of those people?"[19] In England in 2003, a cartoon published in the Independent portrayed a new version of the blood libel—Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon eating Palestinian children covered in blood. In 2006, the Iranian daily Hamshahri promoted a cartoon competition on the Holocaust, and the winning cartoons equated Israel with Nazi Germany.[20] In 2009, the Swedish newspaper, Aftenbladet, accused Israeli soldiers of deliberately killing Palestinian children in order to harvest their organs.[21] The Norwegian daily Dagbladet in 2011 published a cartoon mocking the Palestinian prisoners' swap for Israeli soldier Gilad Shalit with the Buchenwald inscription "Jedem das Seine" (to each his own).[22] British MP David Ward was quoted in 2013 saying "Israel should never have been created."[23] In Holland in May 2014 (on the day dedicated to the memory of the Holocaust), a Muslim group planned its own memorial day to commemorate the supposed "ethnic cleansing" of the Palestinians.[24]
