It stopped as a by-product of Israel's military incursion into southern Lebanon to curb a wave of PLO terrorism. European terrorists at PLO training bases in the line of fire fled home. Once repatriated, they used their expertise against banks, embassies, and other targets. Jews were no longer their priority victims. At that point, governments cracked down. French VIGIPIRATE crushed the extreme-left Action Directe. This, too, was the fate of the German Baader-Meinhoff/RAF, and the Italian Red Brigades.

In 2000, the blowback effect of the Intifada created a second wave of synagogue assaults, predominantly in the tenements ringing industrial cities, where working class North African Jews lived cheek-by-jowl with alienated, mainly unemployed native-born Muslims of North African parents. There the latter played out a "cowboy and Indian-style game" in a "Palestinian and Israeli" scenario—an Intifada transplanted to European soil, some thirty minutes' drive from the city center of Paris. Jewish organizations were in denial, just as the authorities had not yet begun to comprehend the challenges of increasing Islamist defiance.

The third wave is now upon us, generated by demographics, the Internet, and a new generation rejecting the host society, asserting its identity through Jihadism. Though primarily antisemitic, this Intifada, especially in France, is no less intrinsically anti-Western, anti-European, and anti-Christian. Mohamed Merah, the Toulouse Jewish school assassin proved this by murdering French soldiers on leave—though they were Muslims who had in his eyes betrayed Allah by serving the "infidel" enemy.[1] The Jihadi phenomenon has now gone viral through social networks and Twitter, as a command structure emerges. The lone wolf is being replaced by the mob mobilized through the internet.

French and other European-born radicalized Islamists—soon to be reinforced by Jihadi interns returning from Syria/Iraq or Pakistani madrassah schools, are piggy-backing the cause of Palestine to vent their rage on the values and institutions of their own European homelands. The summer of 2014 began with hordes of Hamas supporters splitting away from Gaza solidarity demonstrations to assault synagogues and terrorize Jewish quarters. It proceeded to the shooting at the Brussels Jewish Museum, leaving four dead. It ended with the mob burning police stations, banks, pharmacies, destroying hundreds of cars as sacking, torching, and looting spread. "What starts with the Jews never ends with them." It needs only a catalyst to arrive at the abyss.

It took a march of no more than three hundred people for Gaza in the southern French provincial town of Gap to take us over the edge. A dozen hooded Islamists reportedly beat a handicapped woman to a pulp despite the
