presence of witnesses. The perpetrators had seen through the window of her apartment what appeared to be a wall design of Stars of David and crosses. Where were the trades unions, churches, teachers, who once spoke out? Government solidarity statements and commitments to Jewish security ring hollow when extremist demonstrations are authorized, when arrested rioters are routinely released by judges with a warning or suspended sentences, and when policemen guarding a Jewish synagogue prostrate themselves when threatened by a car of Islamists brandishing assault rifles—what witnesses said were Kalashnikovs.[2]

If the Jew is the canary in the mine, why is he being abandoned, when all the miners are now threatened? If Israel has been the original victim of suicide terror, why, now that it is viral, is she excluded from anti-terror coalitions?

Perhaps our second strand of ID theft can offer some light on why Jews continue to be "Am levadad yishkon" (a people that shell dwell alone; a reference to Numbers 23:9) rather than realize its messianic vision to serve as a "light unto the nations." The ID theft follows a route-map from Durban to the World Social Forum, and from UNISPAL to the UNESCO World Heritage Committee.

In 1999, I had the bizarre privilege of being the only Jew elected to the International Steering Committee (ISC) of the United Nations World Conference against Racism to be held in Durban, South Africa in August–September 2001, and thus attended the Preparatory Commission (PrepCom) meetings in Geneva, Strasbourg, Warsaw, and Santiago de Chile. Seated at a session relating to Holocaust education, a Palestinian legal counsel crept up behind me and whispered in my ear: "We will give you the Holocaust, if you give us Palestine." A Dutch colleague could not hear me, but snapped a photo of my outraged expression for posterity.

Denied access to the final PrepCom in Tehran, on arrival in Durban I was unceremoniously expelled from the ISC, which dubbed me as "the World Jew." Most Jewish participants were undoubtedly shell-shocked by the Durban experience in the summer of 2001. It was there that a latter-day supercessionism or replacement theology was born—the ID theft of the Jewish narrative.

It began etymologically with "the two antisemitisms": a Tehran University professor argued that following the 1948 triumph of Zionism, antisemites refocused on the other "Semite." So antisemitism became Arabophobia, and—in a new Orwellian Newspeak—Zionism became "antisemitism." Hence, for ID damage control, we no longer hyphenate the word "antisemitism." Next were the three "Holocausts"—the trans-Atlantic slave Copyright © 2016. Nebraska. All rights reserved.

Anti-Judaism, Antisemitism, and Delegitimizing Israel, Nebraska, 2016. ProQuest Ebook Central,