flight from Mecca via Jerusalem to heaven, tethered his winged steed Buraq at a wall that bears his name. That wall is the Kotel, the "Wailing," or Western Wall—part of the Temple complex that is Judaism's holiest site. It is now claimed that the wall's "true" significance was stolen by a Jewish conspiracy, and must be returned to the embrace of Islam.[8]

The Museum of Palestinian Heritage is under construction in Ramallah, "until it can be moved to Jerusalem" as "a safe place for unsafe ideas." Its website makes clear that this is "a new arm in the arsenal for DeJudaization of Jewish heritage."[9] In the same "fraternal" spirit, a joint Jordanian-Palestinian resolution presented in Qatar demands that Jerusalem be returned to its pre-Jewish authenticity and integrity.To deny a people's heritage is tantamount to its deletion from history and geography.

Bottom line, the zero-sum equation is devastating: the validation of Palestine requires the deletion of the Jewish heritage and the impugning of its narrative. Hence the obstinacy in refusing recognition of Isarel as a Jewish state. The objective is the total deconstruction of the Zionist enterprise. I dare to name this "cataclysmic antisemitism"—a Judeophobic mutation unforeseen in the recently-withdrawn EU Working Definition of Antisemitsm, the OSCE Berlin Declaration of 2004, nor even in Durban, where the seeds were sown. Much more dangerous than "antisemitic terrorism" and similar manifestations of violence, ID theft endangers our posterity and condemns us to isolation as a pariah among the nations. ID theft is a battle that must be won.

One response to set the record straight is the Simon Wiesenthal Centre's exhibition "People, Book, Land: The 3,500 Year Relationship of the Jewish People with the Holy Land/Land of Israel." Authored by Professor Robert Wistrich, it opened in June 2014 against all odds at UNESCO in Paris, receiving record visitors throughout its display. In April 2015 the exhibition was even shown at the United Nations Headquarters in New York. This is the kind of concerted campaign of pushback that is required if we are to address the most dangerous antisemites of our time—those who seek to steal the identity of the Jewish State before they can attempt to erase it physically.

Apathy in unthinkable. Lord' Byron's nightmare challenge is never more ominous nor current:

> Tribes of wandering feet and weary breast,
> How shall ye flee away and be at rest?
> The wild dove hath her nest, the fox his cave,
> Mankind their country—Israel but the grave![10]
