imperialism in partnership with Zionism" against the indigenous Palestinians. The latter lived under apartheid-like conditions, including ghettos, restrictions of movement, and suppression that could only be undone by BDS.

> Let us use people's sanctions against Israel as effectively as the international anti-apartheid movement did so against apartheid South Africa. The Palestinians will resist oppression in any way that they can. However, it is the duty of democratic forces across the world to support them in any way that we can. Let us campaign to persuade South Africans not to buy Israeli consumer goods and South African businesses not to import Israeli products of any kind. Let us research ways in which the Israeli economy can be compromised through legal means. We should cooperate with anti-Zionist forces in all countries to get international financial, trade and cultural sanctions against Israel.

> Together, and in an increasingly organized manner, the world's democratic forces can defeat the forces of Zionism and imperialism in the Middle East.[45]

In a particularly ugly communication at the height of Operation Protective Edge, Tony Ehrenreich, a one-time trade unionist and now a senior ANC politician in the Western Cape opposition, called on those Jews supporting Zionism to leave the country.[46] As R. W. Johnson, a former Oxford don wrote, his attack on South African Jews amounted to a "Blood Libel."[47] Social Media has displayed even worse outrages. "Kill the Jew"; "May you burn in Hell"; "You must get out of South Africa and don't come back, you Jewish bastards," reflect the tone. Posters held aloft during marches show no distinction between opposition to Israel policies and simple crude Jew-hatred. "Keep Calm and Kill the Jews" was posted on the ANC Youth League website.[48] Even more disturbingly ANC Secretary General, Gwede Mantashe, issued a statement describing the establishment of the State of Israel as a "crime against humanity."[49]

Although blatant Jew-hatred is condemned from time to time by BDS leaders, the harnessing of those forces wishing to delegitimize Israel and undo the Zionist project is what counts. BDS's latest success has been to prevent senior ANC figures addressing the Gauteng Jewish Board of Deputies Conference. The stakes are high. The well-funded South African BDS movement—with access to government—recognizes the importance of defining Israel as an apartheid state: endorsement of this equation by the South African government and public opinion clearly bodes ill for the future of the Jewish community.
