is coming all too slowly, if at all. As it looks ahead to becoming a great power, how to ensure that all women have more of a say in shaping their lives will be one of India's greatest challenges. Perhaps education will be the key, or the voices of prominent female leaders like Sonia Gandhi may change engrained attitudes. When women such as Sita are able to choose their future, Indians will find that both the family and society are strengthened, leading to a more powerful and confident India on the world stage.
