CSF payments are reimbursements for actual expenses incurred in support of the WOT operations. It is a means to reimburse countries that have incurred incremental costs to provide logistical, military, and other support to U.S. military operations. If the country would have incurred certain costs in the normal course of its activities, those costs will not be reimbursed. Moreover, the cost of reimbursing nations for these costs is far less expensive than if we had carried out these operations ourselves.

REIMBURSABLE COSTS

DoD reimburses costs associated with the movement and sustainment of forces engaged in providing support to the WOT. Typical categories of reimbursable support include strategic air and sea lift for deployment, troop rotation (for long-term commitments), and redeployment. Resupply flights may be approved for reimbursement on a case-by-case basis, though prior coordination with Combatant Commanders and the Office of the Secretary of Defense is strongly recommended. Reimbursable sustainment costs include expenditures for food; bulk and personal water; appropriate lodging; laundry; waste removal; base operations support; petroleum, oil, and lubricants (POL) for support of both vehicles and personnel (for heaters, air conditioners, and generators); medical consumables; selected inoculations; and planning conferences to facilitate support to operations. Countries may also incur reimbursable costs when providing services such as security for transiting or deployed forces. Additional costs that may be reimbursed include those for increased use of equipment or aircraft, additional employment of personnel, operation of a field hospital, incremental activities to manage flight operations, costs incurred to coordinate operations in support of U.S. operations, or incremental costs associated with actual provision of a specific unit. Reimbursement will not be approved for costs associated with salaries for troops, hazardous or overseas duty pay, insurance for equipment or personnel, depreciation of equipment used in operations, spare parts beyond those needed for the mission, or stipends for troops, such as those normally associated with missions undertaken on behalf of the United Nations.

EVALUATION AND PROCESSING OF CSF CLAIMS

The Department of Defense has a multi-step approval process before releasing reimbursements to a coalition country. The guidelines DoD uses to review each claim were established in 2003 in concert with the Office of the DoD Inspector General (OIG). The current DoD process for reviewing CSF claims is as follows:

- A country incurs logistical, military, and other expenses in support of the WOT and submits a claim for reimbursement of those expenses to the U.S. Embassy in that country. (Typically, the Defense Attaché or other defense representative in the Embassy receives the claim for reimbursement.)
- The Office of the Defense Representative- Pakistan (ODRP),in the U.S. Embassy endorses that the country incurred the expenses in support of U.S. military operations in the WOT and submits the request for reimbursement to the Combatant Command.
