the Comptroller partially disallowed these costs, reducing the cost of navy food to the same amount as that paid for the army (approximately $200 per person). In November 2006, Defense approved navy food cost at approximately the same level as that paid for the air force (approximately $400 per person). However, the Comptroller deferred all navy food costs for the March through June 2007 claim period (processed in February 2008), pending receipt of additional justification from Pakistan.

Note: Pakistani reimbursement claims January 2004 through August 2004 did not provide sufficient information to allow us to calculate average food costs per person.

In addition, we found that Defense paid the Pakistani navy more than $1.5 million in possibly inflated costs for damage to navy vehicles. On average, Defense paid the Pakistani navy more than $5,700 per vehicle per month in damages, in comparison with the army's average claim of less than $100 per vehicle per month.[19] According to the most recent navy claims, these vehicles generally consisted of passenger cars and SUVs that were not involved in combat. By contrast, the army vehicles were used to conduct military operations in the FATA and border region.

Defense Paid Costs That Were Potentially Duplicative

Comptroller guidance calls for CENTCOM to ensure that costs are not counted twice; however, none of the CENTCOM memos we reviewed provided any indication that a review for duplicate costs had been performed. As a result, Defense paid more than $8.9 million in potentially duplicative costs. For example, the most recent Pakistani navy claim (June 2007) includes cost categories titled "vehicle damage" and "cost of vehicles repaired," but there is no detail provided to explain the differences between these two categories, and there was insufficient detail to determine whether some or all of the claimed costs were unique or duplicative. This claim also included the categories "cost of fuel for vehicles" and "average
