U.S. FOREIGN POLICY IN PAKISTAN: IMPLICATIONS FOR REGIONAL SECURITY, STABILITY, AND DEVELOPMENT: HEARING BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ONE HUNDRED TENTH CONGRESS

United States Government Printing Office

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS, WASHINGTON, DC

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:04 a.m. in room 2172, Rayburn House Office Building, Hon. Howard L. Berman (chairman of the committee) presiding.

Chairman Berman. The committee will come to order.

We have a really very impressive panel of witnesses for today's hearing. We also have a little partisan conflict on the House floor that may mess up my notion of a sensible and orderly way to go through with this hearing. But we will get started and see where that takes us. We are very delighted that the three of you made the time out of your schedule to come here today.

Today we turn our attention to a region that defense experts have singled out as perhaps the most likely launching point of a future al-Qaeda terrorist strike. The tribal regions of Pakistan provide safe haven for thousands of militants and terrorists who seek not only to destabilize Pakistan and neighboring Afghanistan but who also plan attacks around the globe. For this reason I believe that it is imperative that we review United States foreign policy toward Pakistan to find out what is working, what is not, and how a new administration should approach this critical region.

With new civilian and military leadership in Pakistan we now have a chance to establish a sustainable and mutually beneficial bilateral relationship: A relationship that recognizes
