antenna, bore the brunt of the deadly ambush, and its driver got hit by a burst of a machine gun. Yet this brave soldier kept on moving.

Sketch 13.2: Names of terrorists who were part of the ambush.

Suresh ordered the men to fan out from both sides, and in a pincer movement they carefully advanced towards the site of the ambush. The terrorists had hastily abandoned their positions and vanished.

The ambushers had deployed themselves behind a wall so that they could take us on at point-blank range, from both sides of the road. There were impressions of their boots on the tables placed behind the wall of the polyclinic, from where the murderous fire was unleashed. A large number of fired cartridges of the AK-47 and
