- Open new routes of infiltration into the Kashmir valley from the Kargil and Turtok areas.

Sketch 17.2: The Pakistan Army's intrusions into Kargil (Batalik).

It has been revealed by researchers, including some from Pakistan, that as far back as 1987, a similar plan had been conceived. However, it was probably shelved as it was either considered foolhardy and impractical, or did not receive political clearance. On being appointed the army chief in 1998, General Musharraf, who is believed to be amongst the chief architects of
