

Poma village in Arunachal was developed as a model village.

During the visit of the minister of tourism, Kumari Selja, we brought up the possibility of a tourist resort along the Poma river in the same area. We made an effective presentation and she promised to have the project examined and cleared on a fast track basis. To her credit, a project worth Rs 3.9 crores has been sanctioned and the work has already started. This project is one of the exceptional cases where the central government has released the funds to create a green tourism resort using wood, bamboo and grass for thatched roofs. The project is being executed by the state tourism department and involves the participation of villagers of the area.
