SPOTLIGHT

Gen. J.J. Singh, Army Chief

New Delhi, Feb. 1: Indian Army soldiers will now point their guns downward and drop the word "kills" from their vocabulary, as the force attempts to win the hearts and minds of people in states afflicted by insurgency.

On his first day in office, the new Chief of Army Staff, Gen. J.J. Singh, announced a series of measures to project the Army's "human face" in dealing with sensitive situations in Jammu and Kashmir and the Northeast.

After inspecting a guard of honour outside his South Block office here, Gen. Singh said that he objects to the word "kills" used frequently in Army parlance for terrorist casualties. He said that not only would the word be dropped, units would be judged on the basis of feedback from local populations about their behaviour and not the number of "kills."

He said soldiers would now be asked to hold their guns downwards and not in a manner to intimidate citizens. This, said the Army chief, would be made possible by providing new slings enabling the guns to be carried facing downward without hampering their use in the event of an emergency.

The general said a new armed forces joint doctrine was in the pipeline. Even the new war doctrine of the Army would be finetuned and put to the test through exercises. Referring to recent incidents of indiscipline, he said such instances were minuscule. "We do not condone such mistakes. Prompt and stern disciplinary action
