be leaving shortly as brothers in arms. I am sanguine that you will value this training as the bedrock of a successful and challenging career in the armies of your respective countries.

I wholeheartedly felicitate parents and guardians on this momentous day and salute their courage, support and love for sending their sons to be soldiers…

It was on 2 August 1964 forty-six years ago when my father, then Major J.S. Marwah, was here to see his son pass out from the portals of this military academy. He is a sprightly ninety-year-old young man, who is present here to witness today's magnificent parade; just to remind you that he also graduated and got commissioned from this academy sixty-seven years ago, and he is here today to bless all of us. Finally, my dear brother officers, may you rise to every challenge and have a satisfying and a fulfilling way of life in the olive greens. I have the great privilege to welcome you to the folds of our glorious Indian Army. I wish you success, glory and God speed in all your endeavours.
