[1] The J7 telephone had replaced the Second World War field telephone set. It had a crank handle to send a ring and the handset had a ‘pressel’ switch that had to be pressed while talking. The handset fitted snugly in a small metal box for easy carriage.