the chief were enunciated by General B.C. Joshi in 1993. Thereafter, during my tenure, ten more were added. These have been reproduced in Appendix 4. Successful and professionally conducted operations based on hard intelligence, causing minimum inconvenience to the local populace, and with little or no loss of innocent lives or other collateral damage, would greatly help in the elimination of the terrorists, and more importantly, in winning over the people as well.

A representation of the concept 'iron fist and velvet glove'.

It is of vital importance that the security forces avoid the use of excessive force, and conduct themselves in an impeccable manner at all times. In one of my first statements on becoming the chief of army staff, I laid great emphasis on projection of the 'humane face of our army, and an even greater focus on respect for human rights.
