- The army doesn’t quantify productivity and the system of motivation is not based on monetary considerations. Esprit de corps, camaraderie, regimental pride, act as motivators

- The army recruits through trial by fire and at the boot camp where the best and fittest survive. Many officers leave the Army mid-way as they can’t be promoted or are not the best

- In the battlefield, speed and baldness is more important than perfection. Indecisiveness can be a fatal flaw. An average decision taken on time can carry the day while a brilliant decision that came late can result in defeat. The key is to pre-empt the enemy
