how hard he’d dreamed, how determined he’d been to be where he was now, standing there facing me. I felt like asking him; it felt like he was asking me:

‘Who are you, son? Where have you come from? How did you come to be here?’