his striving; and also every man may draw comfort from Lessing’s fine saying, that the search for truth is more precious than its possession.