Sometimes life throws some very unexpected and pleasant surprises our way—this book is certainly one of them.

When I participated in the Kargil operations, I didn't have the faintest idea that it would get me the nickname 'The Kargil Girl'. As work for the motion picture was coming to an end, I got a call from Nirvan Singh one evening. He told me about the idea of the book, but I was not very sure about writing it. I would like to thank both Nirvan and Kiran for not only encouraging and supporting me through the writing of the book, but also for always being extremely patient and understanding.

Thanks are due to Suhail Mathur, for all his help and efforts in making this project successful.

To my publisher Penguin Random House India and the commissioning editor Gurveen Chadha, for all the support.

To my instructors Group Captain Sanjeeb Kumar Barbora, Group Captain Subash Shankar Rao Patil, Air Commodore R.O.J. Assey and Air Commodore Mukesh Rawat (the order in which they taught me), whom I can never thank enough. Whatever I am today was made possible because of their teachings, guidance and encouragement.

To the Indian Air Force, for helping me realize my dream of flying in the blue skies, and for all the opportunities I got. It has been an honour and a privilege to serve in this magnificent organization. My sincere thanks to my commanding officer and my flight commander during the Kargil operations.

My biggest gratitude to Maa and Papaji. I would not have reached anywhere had it not been for their love and unconditional support and blessings. My brother has been my toughest competition (who always made
