It had been great fun nonetheless, and, even though we got bust, I wouldn't have swapped the thrill of celebrating a win over the Windies in Antigua by smoking a joint for anything. But, ja, we did get bust. And this is how it happened …

The whole story came out a few days later when, during a two-day game in Montego Bay, Daryll Cullinan and Roger Telemachus had this huge altercation. The two of them had never really seen eye to eye, and neither of them ever backed down for anybody … especially Roger. That guy did not take a step back, ever.

I was doing twelfth-man duties during the Montego Bay game – never a favourite way to spend my time.

So we're all sitting in the changing room during one of the breaks – I don't recall whether it was the lunch or tea break – and Roger breaks wind. At which Daryll completely loses his marbles. I mean, Roger just farted. Sure, it might have been loud and lengthy, and not at all pleasant on the nose, but all of us were laughing. Except Daryll. Who knows why? Daryll is Daryll. I've never understood or liked the guy. I'm a pretty easy-going individual and I got along with most of my former Proteas teammates, but Daryll wasn't one of them.

Daryll had been my very first roommate on my maiden tour with the Proteas in 1996 for the Kenyan Cricket Association's Centenary tournament in Nairobi, which would be my very first games for the team. So I'm sharing a room with Daryll, and his wife Virginia – they're now divorced – phones him and he isn't in the room. So I say, 'Virginia, I'll give Daryll the message. I'm sure he'll get back to you soon.'

Anyway, Daryll comes back to the room and I give him the message. After an hour or so, I asked him if he's remembered to phone his wife. All he said was, 'Fuck off. It's got nothing to do with you.'

It just blew me right out of the water – I mean, I was basically just covering his back, you know? And since that day I've never liked him. He has my respect as a cricketer, but that's where it ends. It's obviously tricky when you are teammates. You just stay out of each other's way and never really engage too much. The shit thing, though, is when you have to bat with the guy! I mean, you're out there in the middle and the oke hits a bladdy four and you don't really like him … now you have to say 'good shot', and you know – and he knows – that you don't really mean it.
