the point of it all any more. I've got everything I need … and the clothes I bought five years ago are still in fashion.

The only problem is that they no longer bladdy fit me. I was on creatine back then and had more muscle mass. Now that I'm smaller, it means that I have a whole lot of shirts and suits that don't fit me properly. They fit my dad, though, and he's basically taken them all. The guy is looking pretty damn sharp these days, I can assure you. His girlfriend has just bought a Merc SLK, so my old man is cruising in designer gear with the top down.

Ja, I've also been into cars in a big way. Man, I've spent a lot of money on cars. I remember when the Audi TT first came out – I just had to have one. I must've been one of the first okes in South Africa to get one. I also had that old slab-shaped Audi Cabriolet. Ja – I don't know what I was thinking there. I looked like an old man in that convertible. It was nice-looking, though – a stunning car with a black interior, but not a car for a person my age. I've got a black BMW X5 at the moment – classy, but not too flashy, and practical. I think the car is a fair reflection of where my head is these days.

Booze has obviously also cost me a fair amount of money over the years. In the early days, Paul Adams and I used to hit a club called Sirens in Claremont. I can barely recall all the times I used to get vrot there, but it was a lot. During one winter in the off-season we went there every single night until 5 a.m. in the morning. 'The Month of Madness', we called it. As you can imagine, we were responsible for a large chunk of the club's income that month.

So, ja, I've always liked expensive things and I have sometimes bought more than my budget allowed for. On a couple of occasions, I'd try to draw money at an ATM, only to find a big fat minus in my account. With all my bond payments and after some enthusiastic shopping, I'd find my money … you know … blown.

But now I've organised my finances so that I've got two accounts. It's pretty standard stuff – all my debit orders come off my one account, and I use the other one for everyday stuff. I have this great banker at BOE – her name is Candice – and she transfers the money from one account into the other for me.

Unfortunately, at one stage I spent money faster than Candice could transfer it, though fortunately I've curbed my poor spending habits since then. Candice had to say to me, 'Listen, if you're going to carry on
