Robin Peterson and Monde Zondeki. And, if memory serves, we met a couple of days before the fateful game against Sri Lanka when, thanks to Messrs Duckworth and Lewis, we exited stage left from a home World Cup we were heavy favourites to win. Anyway, in walked Tenielle with a friend of hers. I looked at her, she looked at me, and she walked past me to sit outside. A little later she came over and said, 'Can I buy you a drink?' Naturally, I said yes.

I don't think she knew who I was – obviously I was trading only on my good looks! So she bought me the drink, but she didn't join us – I think she and her friends were on their way to a club. As it happens, the guys and I were planning to go to the same club, so I arranged to meet Tenielle there and return the compliment by buying her a drink. I didn't get her number – which is not like me. And when we got to the club, I looked everywhere for her, which wasn't like me either – normally the girls are the ones doing the looking. But this girl had made an impression on me. Problem was, I couldn't find her anywhere. And I looked everywhere. High and low.

Eventually she found me, but by that time – as luck would have it – there were about six or seven girls around. I stayed. And I drank. The rest of the night was a complete blank for me. Tenielle, I'm happy to say, didn't give up. She found out where the team was staying and left her cellphone number at the hotel for me. Clearly she was keen. And that's how it started. The attraction between us was immediate and it was physical from the word go. Although I do remember this one time where, despite all my intentions, I couldn't quite … 'follow through'.

We were at a club near the Cullinan Hotel in Cape Town – also during the World Cup – and I got horribly drunk. Tenielle pretty much had to look after me that night. Anyway, I got the munchies on the way home and insisted we stop at a KFC. I remember … actually, I don't … Tenielle remembers me demanding, 'I want six pieces of chicken.' I got my six pieces of chicken. But when we got home, I fell asleep with a drumstick in my mouth. So, ja, being so out of it meant that nothing happened that night. Tenielle teased me about it for a long time.

At first, our relationship was pretty casual. Tenielle had a boyfriend, but she made an effort to stay in touch with me. I loved seeing her when I went to Durban. Then, the West Indies tour came up in 2005. I'd obviously been to the islands before and knew what a nice place it was. I wasn't planning to
