piece together different bits of evidence to build up a clear, comprehensive and deep understanding of the project's requirements.

At another level, the relationship between the project teams and the work centres should be encouraged and developed by the project leader. Both parties must be very clear in their minds about their mutual interdependence and the fact that both of them have a stake in the project. At yet another level, each side should assess the other's capabilities and identify areas of strength and weakness in order to plan what needs doing and how it should be done. In fact, the whole game can be seen as a process of contracting. It is about exploring and arriving at an agreement on what each party expects of the other; about realistical y understanding the constraints of the other party; and about communicating the success criteria while defining some simple rules about how the relationship is to work; but above al , it's the best means of developing clarity in the relationship, both at the technical and personal levels, in order to avoid any nasty surprises in the future. In IGMDP, Sivathanu Pil ai and his team did some remarkable work in this area through their home-grown