when we are ready, the gentlest of contacts with Him fil s us with insight and wisdom. This could come from an encounter with another person, from a word, a question, a gesture or even a look. Many a time, it could come even through a book, a conversation, some phrase, even a line from a poem or the mere sight of a picture. Without the slightest warning, something new breaks into your life and a secret decision is taken, a decision that you may be completely unconscious of, to start with.

I looked around the elegant lounge. Somebody had left a book on a nearby sofa. As if to fil the smal hours of that cold night with some warm thoughts, I picked up the book and started browsing. I must have turned only a few pages of the book, about which I do not remember a thing today. It was some popular book related to business management. I was not real y reading it, only skimming over paragraphs and turning pages. Suddenly, my eyes fel on a passage in the book, it was a quotation from George Bernard Shaw. The gist of the quote was that al reasonable men adapt themselves to the world. Only a few unreasonable ones persist in trying to adapt the world to themselves. Al progress in the world depends on these
